A Bellingham, Wash. leftist who is the founder of the local chapter of the Naked Bike Ride has bailed out after being arrested and charged with child sex crimes. Zachary Elisha Robertson, a former coordinator with Food Not Bombs, allegedly had dozens of files of explicit images of young children on his laptop. He was caught after allegedly looking at the images while masturbating under a blanket. The Naked Bike Ride features heavily at Pride events where people bring children to ride along with them. Those who have raised safeguarding concerns have been called transphobic and queerphobic. Robertson authored and drew a children's book called "Norma Normal" about a young girl who doesn't wear clothes. He is also a founder of the Cascadia Community Land Trust. Robertson told Bellingham Police that the child nude images were research material for his 2020 book. He bailed out on March 11 after paying $2,500 cash. He's been removing his social media since.
